Community Preservation Templeton adopted the program, May 7, 2007. In 2000 the law was signed in by then Gov. Paul Cellucci and the Community Preservation Trust Fund was created. What can it be used for? Historic Resources for something that is significant to the history of a city or town. Community Housing for people that make less than the median income, including housing for seniors. Open Space includes coastal lands, land for wildlife or nature reserves. Land for Recreational use like gardens, trails, parks or a playground. Templeton projects include: Grange Hall, Scout Hall, Gilman Waite; First Church Tomb and the Widow's Walk on a home on Wellington Road.

This is a story about John Boynton who made his career in the tinware trade in Templeton. In the 1800s kitchen tinware was made locally and often sold from a peddler's wagon that traveled around New England selling their products at individual homes. Some of the products he made and distributed were pots, tin cups and other tin housewares. He and other peddlers across New England all carried Boynton's products. The tinware was sold or sometimes swapped for cotton rags. The rags were then used for making different grades of paper. Boynton's Tin Shop was once housed in what is now known as Grange Hall in Templeton. John Boynton's business was profitable and when he retired he used his money to give back to the community. One of his projects was the founding of the Boynton Public Library in Templeton. However his legacy goes far beyond Templeton. He wanted to create a school of science so students could assist many of New England's new industries. Boynton discussed his idea with Ichabod Washburn, owner of the world's largest wire mill.

Boynton envisioned a type of schooling that would elevate the social position of the mechanic and manufacturer, but not necessarily teach the skills needed to become either. Washburn, on the other hand, wanted to teach technical skills through a sophisticated apprenticeship approach.

Boynton consulted Seth Sweetser, a pastor, for ways to realize his vision. By chance it happened that Ichabod Washburn had previously consulted Sweetser about the proper way to actualize his own vision. Sweetser drafted a letter expressing Boynton's and Washburn's wish to other significant men within Worcester County. The document was sent to 30 Worcester businessmen. It told of a "liberal proposal to found a Free School for Industrial Science" in Worcester. Boynton anonymously offers a fund of $100,000 for the establishment of a scientific school in Worcester, upon the condition that our citizens shall furnish the necessary land and buildings."

Additional funding and land grants for the university were given by Stephen Salisbury II, who was an influential merchant and later served as the first president of the institute's board of directors. In response to Boynton's offer, more than 225 Worcester citizens and the workers at 20 of the city's factories and machine shops contributed to the construction of the original building.

On May 10, 1865, the secretary of the commonwealth recorded the Institute as a legal corporation, and it came into formal existence.

Both Boynton and Washburn died before it's opening of the college on November 11, 1868. Charles O. Thompson, the first president of the Institute, stood before the first two buildings named in honor of their founders, Boynton Hall and Washburn Shops.

Boynton Hall and Washburn Shops are the two buildings with their distinctive towers that symbolized the institution's two educational objectives of theory and practice, and inaugurated the Worcester County Free Institute of Industrial Science, now known as W.P.I.
